FLOWER ANGELS.

Where do the flowers go when they die,
When the winds of winter blow?
Where do the lilies and violets go,
And the dear little baby flowers that grow
Everywhere under the sky?
Don't you know?

Don't you know? Last fall
As I walked over the hill one day
I saw little graves, where the blossoms lay
Dead and buried and hidden away—
King Frost had slain them all.
Lackaday!

There was not a sound in valley or hill,
I walked like one in a dream;
I could not hear the voice of the stream.
The sunset cast not a single gleam
On the world so gray and still—
Not a beam.

But suddenly, out of the winter sky,
Little white angels I saw descend
By twos and threes, and hand in hand,
Till the air was filled with the shining band
All about me, and ever so high
In the sky.

Oh, yes! I and the children know
That somewhere up in the winter sky
The beautiful gates of flower heaven lie,
And when flower angels about us fly
The sober grown folks call it "snow,"
But we know!
—Dorothy Deane in Kate Field's Washington.

ROBY'S PRISONER.

The clank of canteens, the steady tramp of thousands of feet, the dull, monotonous roll of drum, and the Union men marched into Poinsett, Miss., on their way south. The Poinsett mansion and plantation, on the outskirts of the village that bore the name of the owner of the big cotton fields, was to all appearances deserted as Major Brown, handsome even in his dusty regimentals, rode up to the front door and rapped loudly with the hilt of his sword. A trembling old negress timidly opened the door for a little space and pushed her white, woolly head through the crevice.

"Can you give a dozen officers accomodations for the night, auntie?"

The voice was as kind as the face, and Aunt Nancy threw the door wide open and majestically stepped back for the officer to enter.

"Jes', tek a seat in de pahlah, Mass Officer, tell I call Miss Roby." The negress walked away, and Major Brown sat down in one of the antique chairs, glanced about at the furnishings and out of the window and across a landscape rich in green and gold of the meadows and the setting sun. At the window sill a honeysuckle bloomed, and a humming bird, oblivious to the martial motion of the mass in blue passing the house like a steel tipped stream, hung over the flowers. A rosebush shrouded the garden wall and presented a bank of brilliant blossoms against the dark leaves.

Miss Roby Poinsett was standing in the door when the major looked around. He arose, bowed, and saying that he was sorry to discommode her asked if accomodations could be accorded him and his fellow officers for the night. "I am Major Brown," he concluded respectfully.

"You certainly are welcome, sir," the young woman replied, "though I fear we are poor entertainers. Our brothers are in the east, and our help has deserted us, except old auntie," with a nod of her head toward the hall.

"It is kind of you, and I assure you of ample protection."

Again bowing, the major stepped to the door and gave a command to his aid, who rode away. An hour later strange fires dotted the meadow, and the green pastures whitened under the ranks of Sibley tents. The whippoorwill's call was hushed by the quavering blasts of bugle; shadowy forms passed to and fro before the fires. Then all was dark and still, only the white tents and shiny stars and pacing sentries. The army slept.

Auntie proved her value and the generosity of her larder. Twelve officers discussed the biscuits and honey and savory fried chicken and wheaten loaves. Miss Roby sat at the head of the table as hostess. Her mother begged to be excused, as she was indisposed. The honors of the table were well cared for, and later, when a half dozen bottles of wine were brought out of the cellar and a box of cigars was produced, the talk flowed freely. No word of war was uttered and no allusion made to the camp on the meadow. The men knew they were partaking of the hospitalities of an enemy given as freely as if they were friends.

The cigars were smoked on the veranda, and the crescent moon came up over the distant hills before the little group broke up. Aunt Nancy handed each a candle and led the way up the broad stairs to the rooms above. A cheerful fire of twigs was burning in the grate in Major Brown's room, and he sat before it until the last tiny spark winked out, and his candle was sputtering in its socket before he parted the white curtains that concealed his bed. The first streak of dawn showed the outlines of pictures in their oval frames on the wall when the major threw open the shutters and drank in the pure air.

The bugler was just sounding his first blast, and the camp was beginning to wake. Teamsters were knocking about their tent stables, and the horses were neighing for the oats that came with the break of day. Carefully dressing, the major went down stairs to the garden, listening to the early chirping of the birds and the vigorous clarion of the cocks in the great barn that loomed up out of the mist like a mountain. He plucked a rose and pinned it on his uniform. One by one the officers came down. A savory smell of ham and eggs greeted the unbidden guests, and just as the sun was coming up Aunt Nancy announced that breakfast was ready.

The meal was quickly dispatched. The mass of men was soon in motion. The vanguard, with the sun glinting off the steel barrels of the guns, moved on over the arch of a bridge in a dusty road. The clank of canteens, the steady tramp of thousands of feet, the dull, monotonous roll of drum, and the Union men marched out of Poinsett on their way south. Major Brown lingered at the Poinsett mansion until after the rear guard had crossed the bridge—until the last straggler had gone. Then he bade Miss Roby goodby and started to join the troops.

Started to join his troops? At the bridge 14 bushwhackers sprang at his horse. The major's sword flashed, and the leader was under the horse's feet. The animal stumbled over the prostrate man. Smoke puffed from a pistol, and the horse fell to his knees, attempted to rise, but went down with a groan, pinning his rider underneath. The keen sword snapped over the barrel of a guerrilla's gun. The major was taken captive.

Back up the road to the Poinsett mansion the little procession passed. The major, leaning on the arm of the stalwart leader, again faced the broad front door and again Aunt Nancy opened it for him. The prisoner dropped with a groan into a chair and placed his hand on his left leg. "It's broken," he whispered. Miss Roby stood amazed in the doorway. "I have come back," the soldier said, with a painful smile, and his cheeks blanched with pain, "a prisoner. I fear that I shall have to trouble you, for my leg is broken. I must lie down."

The men bore their prisoner up the stairs and laid him on the bed he had so recently left. The doctor from the village was called, and the fracture was gradually reduced. "He can't be moved for eight weeks and probably ten. You can't tell, sah," addressing the major. "It all depends on a man's constitution."

Leaving one of their number on guard the party of Confederates hurried on after other stragglers and to report their prize. The day wore slowly away for the major.

In mind he was leading the troops—the hum of humblebees about the honeysuckles was the dull rumble of the drum; the throb of pulse beats against the pillow was the steady tramping of the men, and the measured ticking of the clock in the hall below the castanet music of the canteen. Gradually the sounds blended; the army passed farther and farther away. The major slept. When he opened his eyes, a bouquet of bright roses stood upon the stand at the head of his bed. The sentry paced back and forth in front of the curtain. A door opened and Miss Roby entered.

Seeing the major was awake, she went to the bedside with the cheer of a hospitable heart. The officer was her prisoner, yet he was her guest. The soft light of day faded away, and Aunt Nancy brought a bowl of bread and milk and a candle. The major ate, talked and slept. The next day the guard was relieved by Miss Roby, who brought her book and work. She read for an hour and then took up her sewing.

The prisoner talked of the north, of Chicago, the growing young city by the lake; told of his mother and sister there, of the great expanse of rich prairies; talked of Abe Lincoln and related amusing anecdotes of the president's life and touched his listener's heart with pathetic sketches of the great abolitionist's history. The days rolled on apace. There was little use for the guard. Major Brown had given his word of honor that he would stay there until taken away or rescued by Union men—and there was little hopes of the latter. Provisions were running low, and the guard was sent away.

July passed into August before the prisoner was allowed to swing himself about the garden on a pair of crutches. The leg got well slowly, but the war went on, though little of the news reached Poinsett.

Then came the days of September. The cotton fields were a tangle with weeds, the plantation lay in fallow. The major, in company with Miss Roby, whom he now called his bodyguard, often took short rides about, and as the broken limb was finally restored a sharp canter over the fields was a common occurrence. Then the guard returned with half a dozen soldiers to take the captive away to one of the many prisons of war in the south.

With them they brought a big, black charger that Colonel Poinsett had sent home for a rest. Miss Roby trembled when she told the major that his captivity, so far as she was concerned, was at an end. The prisoner did not wear his regimentals when he mounted the horse beside the sergeant in command and rode away, and no one could tell that he was in custody. Waving his hand to Miss Roby and bowing politely to her mother, the major was hurried on, for there was little time to be wasted by the soldiers. Roby mounted her father's horse and rode slowly along the road in the direction taken by the men, when suddenly her ear was startled by the report of a dozen musket shots coming in quick succession, followed by the thunder of horses' hoofs.

In an instant her charger had carried her to the turn of the road, beyond which the shots had come—carried her into the midst of the fleeing troops. Down the road in front came a band of Federal cavalry. Another volley of shots and Major Brown's horse fell, throwing the rider into the dust. There was no time to be lost. Spurring her horse to the spot, Miss Roby brought him to a stand directly in front of the prostrate man. The animal seemed to understand what was required and braced himself for the shock. Turning his wicked head from right to left and showing his savage, ivory teeth, the black stood his ground.

The girl, with face paled by the danger, yet features as firm as those of the leader of the charging forces, sat erect and waited. The ranks parted and closed again, but they had missed the man, who in a second more would have been ruthlessly trampled to death. Before the column could wheel Miss Roby had dismounted and was holding a white handkerchief aloft as a flag of truce. At the command of the leader two men came forward, and the rest continued on after the flying Confederates.

"This is Major Brown of the Union army," said Miss Roby as the officer came forward to where the major was still lying in the dust.

"Major Brown!" the sergeant exclaimed. "We were looking for the major." The soldier raised his superior officer, wiped the dust from his face and pressed the canteen to his lips and was rewarded by seeing consciousness return. Then the major stood up and realized that in some way he owed his life to Miss Roby. The troop returned, the men mounted, and the major climbed into a saddle and rode on.

* * * * * * *

Cruel war came and desolated Poinsett. The bursting of bombs along the Mississippi and the roar of cannon from the batteries shook the earth, and black clouds of smoke and the scent of burning powder were often in the air. Colonel Poinsett was brought home to die. Both his sons fell at Antietam. The mansion was burned one dark and rainy night, and Mrs. Poinsett, with Miss Roby and Aunt Nancy, sought shelter in a negro cabin on the plantation.

Then Lee surrendered, and the war was over. The war was over, but the plantation was ruined, and the proud Poinsetts were reduced to straitened circumstances. Patiently Miss Roby struggled to support her mother by teaching in the village school. Aunt Nancy took in washing to help swell the family fund.

One evening in May, 1865, Miss Roby was on her way from the post-office and was passing by the ruins of her old home. This night she felt that she could not bear to gaze upon the monument to her misfortune. When she turned into the path, she saw a man standing by the tall chimney, left like a shaft of victory by the fiery fiend. Where the rose garden had been was a tangle of blackened briers and a mass of weeds. One solitary rose was blooming, and the stranger plucked it and pressed it to his lips. Roby knew that it was the major. Her foot struck a dry twig that crackled with her weight. The major looked around and came to her with extended hands. The woman stood unmoved.

"Do you not know me, Miss Roby?" the major asked as he paused with his feet in the blackened embers.

"I have not forgotten you. But what brought you here?"

"You."

"Do you see the ruins of my home? My father lies buried over there, and both my brothers were victims of northern guns." There was more sadness than resentfulness in the voice.

"I, too, have suffered, though not so much as you," the major replied. "I have lost relatives and friends by the score. I fought on the Union side because I believed it was right, just as your father and brothers fought with Lee. The struggle is over. Let us forgive where we cannot forget."

"I was once your prisoner and could not take advantage of your sympathies to a wounded man to tell you what I have again come to the south to say. If you do not care to listen, then I can go away."

Involuntarily she extended her hand, and the major grasped it eagerly and carried it to his lips.

"You will let me take you away from this scene, take your mother to a place where the thoughts of war will gradually die away?"

"I will go," said Miss Roby. Both her hands were about the major's neck, and her head rested on his broad shoulders for a moment. The door to the little cabin opened, and the light from within fell upon the couple like a mantle of gladness.—Chicago News.

EVANS AND SONTAG have at last been heard from. On Wednesday night they were discovered at Evans' house. Sheriff Kay with a posse of eight men surrounded the building, and as the two great fighters stepped out to take their departure the posse opened fire upon them but the shots flew wide of the mark and they escaped in the darkness without returning the fire. Evans and Sontag evidently had no desire to further frighten the Sheriff and his deputies who acted the part of arrant cowards.

REMINGTON.

Glen Ellen, April 20th, 1893.

A Great Success.

It is probably true that to appreciate fine art the critic must be an expert, but it is unquestionable that we recognize the master-piece without the technical knowledge of a critic. A very enterprising firm is giving everybody who sends them a photograph a life-size crayon portrait, including frame, free of charge. Coming as it does from a most reliable source, our readers should have all the information at our command. The work is the finest that can be produced in the country, and it is a truthful picture to nature which appeals alike to the critical judge of fine art and layman. What can be more valuable in any home than a large portrait of a dear father or mother elegantly framed. This grand work of art heretofore has been beyond the reach of most of us, and, in view of a chance of this nature, it will not be out of place to suggest you should write for full particulars. The well-known Pacific Publishing Co., San Francisco, Cal., are the sole manufacturers, and desire bright and reliable correspondents in every town in the United States and Canada. Write for particulars and read their advertisement in another column.

ARREST OF A MURDERER

After Being at Large Nearly Six Years.

Sheriff Allen has had his eye on the man who committed a murder in this city in 1887 and Saturday effected his capture and arrest. The man's name, although unknown at the time, was discovered to be Patrick Gerian and also that he had relatives in Lodi. With this as a basis the case has been worked upon and information was received recently that the man was at present living at his home. The sheriff telegraphed to the constable at Lodi to make the arrest and Saturday evening received a reply stating that it had been effected and that the man was in jail. He will be sent for Monday and brought here to stand trial.

The murder was committed on the 24th of August, 1887, at about 7 o'clock in the evening. The first intimation that was received was brought to the sheriff's office by a young man, who had the appearance of a tramp. Officers went to investigate and found the corpse of a man lying about twenty feet south of the railroad bridge. A large gaping wound was found in his left breast. Jonathan Roberts witnessed the scuffle between the men, but was unaware that a murder had been committed. From the story told by an eye-witness at the time it seems that there was four tramps who had gone over to the creek to drink a bottle of wine. Gerain quarrelled with Mullen and drawing a large knife cut him in the breast and then escaped.—Santa Rosa Democrat.

The Livernash Trial and the Democratic Politicians.

A dispatch from Santa Rosa says the Livernash trial was productive of very sensational features Wednesday. The defendant finished his testimony the day before and the prosecution presented testimony in rebuttal. In order to impeach the reputation of Livernash for truth and veracity the prosecution put a number of prominent Democratic politicians on the stand. Among them were County Recorder Hall, Deputy County Clerk Juilliard, Assessor Longmore and Matt Doyle, President of the Exchange Bank.

Recorder Hall swore that Livernash's reputation was bad and that he had told untruths to witness.

"You're a liar yourself if you say that," retorted Livernash in an angry manner.

Juilliard and Doyle testified that Livernash's reputation was bad. Excitement in the court was keyed up to a high pitch all day, but the sensation came when Assessor Longmore was called to the witness stand.

"I won't go on the stand until that man is searched," said he. "He is a dangerous man and may have weapons concealed."

The Judge commanded him three times to take the stand before he obeyed. He swore that Livernash's reputation was not good.

The trial is still going on. Livernash is acting as his own attorney and as such is exhibiting remarkable ability.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Preventing Future Misery.

If there is, in this vale of tears, a more prolific source of misery than the rheumatic twinge, we have yet to hear of it. People are born with a tendency to rheumatism, just as they are with one to consumption or to scrofula. Slight causes may develop this. As soon as the agonizing complaint manifests itself, recourse should be had to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which checks its further inroads and banishes the rheumatic poison from the system. This statement tallies exactly with the testimony of physicians who have employed this fine blood depurent in their private practice. There is also the amplest professional and general testimony as to the efficacy of the Bitters for malaria, liver complaint, constipation, indigestion, kidney trouble, nervousness and loss of appetite and flesh. After a wetting, whether followed by a cold or not, the Bitters is useful as a preventive of the initial attack of rheumatism.

Joe Hein, formerly of this place, is now engaged in farming 250 acres in Brown's Valley, Napa county. He has 125 acres in grain and 30 acres in an 8 and 10-year-old orchard. Mr. Hein reports the apricot crop light, but the fruit will be of excellent quality. Pears, peaches, cherries and quinces never looked better and there will be a heavy crop. His grain crop promises an abundant harvest.

The many Sonoma Valley friends of our young friend John B. Skinner will be pleased to learn that he has bought out and has become the sole proprietor of one of the principal drug stores in the Western Addition, the fashionable quarter of San Francisco. Mr. Skinner is very popular in his section of the city and being a graduate of the School of Pharmacy of the University of California is bound to become one of the leading druggists of the metropolis. The "Examiner," in mentioning the change of proprietorship of the above mentioned drug store, says: "The drug store corner of Geary and Fillmore streets has just been bought by the enterprising young druggist, John B. Skinner, so long associated with the drug business of the Western Addition. By careful attention to business Mr. Skinner is sure to secure a large patronage where he is so well and favorably known."

The three-thousand-acre wheat and barley field on the Senator Jones ranch bordering Sonoma Creek a few miles south of this place is making a wonderful growth, and the yield will be the largest per acre ever recorded in this valley. Like all new reclaimed land there are spots in the low places that have missed, but what is lost from this cause is doubly made up by the heavy growth on the balance of the tract. All the low places are alongside the Donahue railway, but less than a fourth of a mile east of the road the land is much higher, and in consequence the field is one solid mass of grain standing between three and four feet high. It is Mr. Pless' intention to return from Stockton with his dredger "Nevada" next fall and again commence reclaiming the balance of the tract. The report circulated here that he had been discharged by the Pless Dredging Company, of which he is a stockholder to the extent of $1,000,000, is really amusing.

THE BOGGS CARRIGER MURDER CASE.

The second trial of Boggs Carriger, charged with the killing of his brother, near this place last summer, came up before Judge Dougherty last Tuesday.

The defense claims the killing to have been accidental.

On Wednesday Dr. Vance, Geo. W. Sparks, E. E. Griffith, Mathias Reibli, Solomon Carriger, A. J. Blaney and J. W. Lennox were examined for the prosecution, which closed its side of the case on the afternoon of that day. The prosecution endeavored to prove that the defendant had an ugly disposition; that he had made threats against and one time had a fight with his brother William and was whipped by the latter. The general trend of the testimoney agreed with that given at the first trial.

M. Ricksecker was the first witness called and produced a design of the Carriger house where the tragedy took place.

Dr. Vance of Sonoma was called and testified to the position in which he found the dead man, to the bloody stains on the door and furniture; also to conducting the post-mortem examination and location of the wound and the course the bullet took.

Mr. Riebli was called and testified to being at the house a short while before the shooting took place, having been sent for by William Carriger and also to the fact of Boggs' coming in in an intoxicated condition and grumbling at his brother. Fowler had come there in the meantime and Riebli left and went to his home and was going to bed when Fowler came and told him that Boggs Carriger had shot his brother.

J. M. Lennox was called and testified to seeing a quarrel between the two brothers, and to the fact that Boggs Carriger told him of the will made by William and that somebody would be killed on account of it yet.

The defense made a motion to have some of the testimony stricken out, as they said they intended to prove that Lennox had not lived there during the time he claimed he had, but the motion was overruled.

Solomon Carriger was called and testified to having visited the house the next morning and seeing his brother and the blood stains on the door and furniture.

Ex-Coroner Blaney was the last witness called and described the clothing of deceased and its texture and in answer to the question if there were any powder marks on the clothing, said there might have been although he did not see any.

Yesterday afternoon a batch of new witnesses were put upon the stand by the prosecution in rebuttal. It is thought the case will go to the jury to-day.

Going Around With a Bullet in His Brain.

Alfred De Bois, the young man who accidentally shot himself in the head in Glen Ellen several months ago, is up and around. For some time past he has been confined in the County Hospital in Santa Rosa. He visited friends in Glen Ellen one day this week. The bullet which is supposed to have penetrated the brain is still in the man's head and apparently is doing no harm. His recovery is marvelous, to say the least, as not one man in a thousand could possibly survive a like wound. Similar cases, however, have been recorded.

The Cautious Ones Were Not so Cautious After All.

There was a wailing and gnashing of teeth in this town yesterday. The innocent cause of it all being Deputy Sheriff Sparks, who had been ordered by the prosecution in the Boggs Carriger murder case, now on trial in Santa Rosa, to subpœna eleven new witnesses, almost every one of whom disclaimed all knowledge of the murder. The following are the names of the unfortunate ones: S. Schocken, Judge Breitenbach, C. W. Englebert, L. Litzius, G. W. Clark, Chas. McHarvey, John Ludeman, Martin Muldry, F. Grothaus, Robt. Poppe and J. M. Cheney. Moral: Don't express your opinion about a criminal case until you are sure there is not to be a second trial.

The Plaza.

The Plaza is being neglected by the City Trustees. So far this season nothing has been done toward plowing and cultivating the trees and shrubs growing in the same. The result is that the trees have already commenced to die and the ground is covered with tall grass and weeds. In neglecting this improvement the City Trustees are doing a great injustice to our property-owners and those who have contributed money to beautify the Plaza. This matter should be attended to before the plowing season is over.

A dose of Simmons Liver Regulator, taken daily, will relieve and prevent indigestion.

A Successful Entertainment.

The entertainment and hop given at Union Hall last Saturday evening by the Columbia Athletic Club was both a social and financial success. The hall was crowded with people, among whom were many prominent residents of this valley, who showed their appreciation in loudly applauding the different numbers on the entertainment programme. Mr. C. Nestor Edison's phonograph was a great success. Its renditions were a surprise to the audience, many of whom had no idea of its capabilities in rendering vocal and instrumental music, recitations, speeches, etc. The evening's entertainment opened with a friendly boxing contest between George Breitenbach of this place and Prof. Cathcart of San Francisco, which was simply an exhibition of agility and skill in boxing and the three rounds were so neatly gone through with by the gentlemen as not to give offense to the most fastideous ladies in the audience. The "talking machine" was then introduced, and interspersed with impromptu specialties by Dr. Sichel and Mr. Edison, entertained the audience for two hours. The phonograph used on this occasion performed wonders. The vocal and instrumental music as rendered by this machine could be distinctly heard by every one in the house. The playing by the Marine Band of Washington and the Park Band of San Francisco and Chas. Meyer's comic songs recently rendered at the California Theatre, together with the drama of "Brady," were the hits of the evening. After the entertainment seventy-five couple participated in a social hop which was kept up until midnight. The success of the entertainment was due in a great measure to the efforts of Mr. Edison and Dr. Sichel, who generously volunteered their services to the Club.

Judgment by Default.

The trial of the suit of Dr. N. W. Greenberg against the City of Sonoma came off on the 14th day of April before Judge Dougherty. The plaintiff's attorney, J. P. Rogers, stated to the Court the object of the suit was to correct two mistakes in the deed or grant of Alcalde Wm. Fuller to Geo. Pierce, executed in January, 1850, of outlot No. 546 of the former Pueblo of Sonoma and to perpetuate the testimony of the latter and Judge Brietenbach. The city, not having appeared, and default having been entered against it, the plaintiff had it all his own way and after hearing all the testimony that was offered by the plaintiff the Court ordered that final judgment be entered as prayed for. When the City Clerk of Sonoma was put upon the witness stand he was asked whether he had in his possession the old Alcalde books or records, to which he made answer that he had not. He further stated that those records had been deposited in the County Recorder's office at Santa Rosa years ago where they now repose. We will state in this connection for the information of those interested in the former Pueblo of Sonoma that the old records of Sonoma City now form part of the records of the county, having been turned over to the latter at the time when county governments were first organized by the State Legislature in 1850. The Alcaldes kept their own records—those under Mexican rule in Spanish and the so-called American Alcaldes in English.

Resolutions of Thanks.

At a regular meeting of the Columbia Athletic Club held in Sonoma, April 20th, 1893, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That Dr. Sichel, C. Nestor Edison and Prof. Walter Cathcart of San Francisco be placed on the roll of Honorary Members of this Club.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Columbia Athletic Club be tendered to the above gentlemen for the valuable aid rendered this Club on the occasion of its recent successful entertainment.

Resolved, That the above resolutions be published in the Sonoma INDEX-TRIBUNE.

It may not be generally known that to poison a dog is a criminal offence, but such is the case, for section 596 of the Penal Code of California says: "Every person who wilfully administers any poison to an animal the property of another, or maliciously exposes any poisonous substance, with the intent that the same shall be taken or swallowed by any such animal, is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison not exceeding three years, or in the county jail one year and a fine not exceeding $500."

The birthday party given by Miss Leonie Stevenot at her parents home in the western suburbs of town, last Saturday afternoon, was a delightful affair. The house was decorated in an eleborate style with beautiful flowers, ferns and evergreens. Singing, games and dancing was greatly enjoyed throughout the afternoon. Delicious refreshments were served in the large dining room and a spirit of merriment kept all the little ones lively at the table. Among the many attractions on the dining table was a handsomely decorated birthday cake upon which rested thirteen lighted wax candles. The cake was frosted with delicate pink sugar and here and there a pretty design rested upon its smooth surface. After partaking of all these good things the playing of games was renewed and continued until late in the afternoon. Miss Leonie was the recipient of many beautiful gifts in rememberance of the anniversary of her thirteenth birthday. The following were those present: Bertie Thomas, Zelma Johnson, Doris Clewe, Theo. Bates, Nettie Thomas, Nettie Goess, Mary Mullen, Mabel Thomas, Celia Granice, Nettie Marcy, Tillie Cornelius, Julie Granice, Lena Shaw, Celestine Perasso, Amelia Carmanatti, Orelia Perrasso, Mary Tartarini, Leland Ramsdell of San Francisco.

A good remedy for freckles. Mix well together one ounce of elder-flower ointment and twenty grains of sulphate of zinc. Rub this into the skin at night and wash in the morning with a little soap and warm water, after which apply a lotion made of one-half pint of rose water and thirty grains of citric acid. This is said to be good and perfectly harmless.

Saturday, according to Dame Fashion's latest dictum, is the day for a modish wedding. Yet it is not so very long ago that if Saturday were suggested for her wedding day, the maiden would have none of it because she firmly believed in the old stanza:

Monday for health,
Tuesday for wealth,
Wednesday the best day of all.
Thursday for crosses,
Friday for losses,
Saturday no luck at all.

The Sight-seers Club of Sonoma, having been to the top of several high mountain peaks in the vicinity, on Sunday last climbed to the top of Blue Mountain. This is one of the highest peaks of the Mayacamas range, north of town. The only ladies that reached the top were Mrs. J. P. Weems and Miss L. Rufus. The gentlemen were Messrs. S. A. Ringstrom, G. Berry, O. R. Rufus and N. Heggie. Other mountains and sights in and about Sonoma will be visited in turn.

Mrs Bissel, the beautiful young wife of the Postmaster General, will doubtless charm others as readily as she did Mrs. Cleveland, who fell in love with her at their first meeting. She is but twenty-seven years of age and has youth, beauty and talent in her favor. She has great musical skill and has been abroad for the purpose of cultivating her voice. She sings divinely and will be a great attraction on that account, while her frank and genial nature, abundant spirits and many other charming qualities and graces form a splendid equipment for a successful social career at the Capital.

BY HIS PORTRAIT PAINTER

hat Jay Gould is dead. I im while I was in America and I have been wondering CRIMINA[L] notes on my knowledge of ould be interesting now. eclined to sit at first, but when nd of mine told him he had a mistake in refusing to sit to said, "Oh, what do you know ut him?" When assured that I as a safe man, he offered to visit y studio and see this friend's portrait. He spoke little at that visit, only really asking what the portrait would cost and how long it would take to do. These questions being answered satisfactorily he said, "I guess I'll be done," and we arranged the sittings.

Fifteen minutes before the last sitting was over he said: "You have still a quarter of an hour according to our agreement. Shall you get done?" "Yes," I said, for I knew my man and took good care to be well ahead of time. He was satisfied with the result, but I am sure he was more impressed by my having been "on time" than by the artistic value of the work.

During the sittings he conversed easily and readily about his accomplished deeds.

Jay Gould probably never before or since my sittings allowed himself to be looked at as I was obliged to look at him for my painting, for I had him in strong light, while I was in shadow. This order of position it was his study to reverse in life. I saw painful expressions pass over his face as of deep seated troubles lingering in his mind, and it is a fact that he never came to the sittings without a detective following him.

He had a happy knack of thinking of methods for bringing to justice people who tried to injure him, which was well illustrated by an incident of which he told me. Having received some letters threatening his life, and as these letters were always posted in New York he arranged to have all the pillar boxes watched, and when a letter was dropped into one of them it was taken out at once and examined. It was in this way—a costly way indeed—that he ran to ground the person who wrote them.

When others wondered where his power lay, as there was so little outwardly to indicate his great ability in certain directions, I felt the true index was his fine fiber and sensitive nerve structure.

Undoubtedly he was a student of human nature and based his operations on his judgment of men more than on his judgment of events.—London Telegraph.

An Italian Doctor's Sign.

"When I was in Italy," said Frank Wallace, "a fit of curiosity took me to Trani. It is a quaint old place and is filled with enough relics of the dead past to keep you guessing for a month. While strolling leisurely along a dirty little narrow side street one day, I was attracted to the sign hanging from the front door of a physician's office. It was a wonder in its way, plainly but neatly printed, and set forth the man's ideas of business in a way that could not be mistaken. I was so struck with it that I made a copy of it. This is how it read: 'Professor Ricca. The said Professor Ricca will use for his salves in making them live snakes and large serpents, wolves, bears, monkeys, marmots, weasels and numerous other wild animals, alive and in good condition.'"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Size and Street Car Fares.

Tuesday afternoon an electric car started for Covington. Every seat was taken. At Third street a woman weighing probably 200 pounds got in. A small man got up and offered her his seat. The man weighed probably 125 pounds. The woman looked at the small space he left when he arose. Then she glanced at her own figure. She thanked the man and said she would stand. The next man then stood up and she instantly sat down. She now occupied the space that had accommodated two men, and the woman next to her was uncomfortably crowded. One of the men went on the back platform and mumbled something about big people paying double fare or little people half fare. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

Hiding Character.

It is true that we instinctively express emotion and character after certain forms, but nature, that has given man the instinct of expression, has also given him the instinct of self preservation, and the latter prompts him with the desire to hide and disguise expressions which may call a dangerous attention to his weakness. Hence it is that the nervous man will often put on the appearance of the bully, and the coarse minded brute will strive to hide his real nature by an almost exaggerated gentleness and delicacy of action—both very often with a very fair measure of success.—London Spectator.

THE PERFECT BLOOM.

'Tis not the bud though wondrous fair,
Nor yet the full blown, regal rose,
But that rare charm, half seen, half guessed,
Unfolding from her spicy breast
A subtle fragrance on the air;
A pink flush where her sweets repose,
And slow unveil in modest bliss,
Wooed by the sun's warm, loving kiss.

'Tis not the child, though dimpled fair,
Nor yet the woman's thoughtful face
That wins most hearts. 'Tis that sweet flush
On girlhood's cheek like sunset's blush;
The bloom of heaven that lingers there,
And crowns her with angelic grace,
Her clear, pure eyes behold afar
The glory of Hope's gate ajar.

God grant this perfect opening flower
May blossom full without a blight;
May wear her crown of womanhood
As something noble, grand and good;
May spend her strength in righteous power,
With heartstrings ever tuned aright,
Then shall God's presence, like a dove,
O'ershadow her with wings of love.
—Rose Thorpe in Ladies' Home Journal.

Wonderful Work of Earthworms.

Darwin, the great naturalist, gave it as his opinion that earthworms annually bring to the surface not less than 10 tons of dirt to every acre the earth over. This they do through swallowing earth for the sake of the vegetable matter it may contain, the rejected "casting" being the portion brought to the surface because it is rendered unfit for further use by the action of the worm's digestive fluids. Thus it will be seen that earthworms are the farmer's best friends, aiding in agricultural work by rendering the surface porous. Their work of constant perforating makes the soil highly pervious to rains, the tender stalks of plants, etc. They also cover up decaying vegetable matter that may be lying upon the surface and perform other services that are as yet unexplainable.

The earth without worms would be like dough without yeast, cold, hard bound and void of fermentation, and consequently sterile. This has been the case in many instances where the earthworms have been accidently or intentionally destroyed. In all such cases the lost fertility of the soil has been again restored as soon as the worms resumed their work of fertilization.—St. Louis Republic.

A Horse That Reasoned.

One very dark night a doctor was driving along at a fast trot on a level road, when he heard a wagon approaching at a rapid pace from the opposite direction. He could see nothing, but as his lights were burning brightly and the highway was a broad one he was not alarmed. Suddenly, however, his horse made a violent jump to the left and crossed the road just in time to let the approaching team, driven, as it appeared, by a drunken man, dash by in the track which the doctor's buggy had that instant left.

The intelligent creature had walked till the last minute, thinking that the vehicle would keep to the right, and then, when she knew a collision to be inevitable, had sprung out of the path of danger.—Road, Track and Stable.

An Interesting Change.

Students of natural history have pointed out many instances of animals and birds adapting themselves to changed conditions of life. A somewhat interesting example of this is asserted to be taking place at the present time in Australia. The fleeces of the strains of English sheep imported into that continent are said to be growing decidedly lighter, owing to the fact that the heavy fleece is not necessary under a warmer sky. —New York Post.

House Furnishing.

A woman who was confiding to her street car companion that she intended to give her husband "a sofa pillow for the sitting room lounge," her eldest son "a set of swinging shelves for some china in the dining room" and her daughter "a silver inkstand that can go on the library table," glared very fiercely at a man who remarked to his companion that many homes were furnished on the "Christmas installment plan."—Exchange.

A Thief's Candor.

A candid thief appeared the other day before the correctional tribunal in Paris. The judge, addressing him, "Tell me now, why did you steal this pair of old shoes?" The thief, "I thought they were new."—London News.

"German Syrup"

A Farmer at Edom, Texas, Says:

"We are six in family. We live in a place where we are subject to violent Colds and Lung Troubles. I have used German Syrup for six years successfully for Sore Throat, Cough, Cold, Hoarseness, Pains in the Chest and Lungs, and spitting-up of Blood. I have tried many different kinds of cough Syrups in my time, but let me say to anyone wanting such a medicine—German Syrup is the best. That has been my experience. If you use it once, you will go back to it whenever you need it. It gives total relief and is a quick cure. My advice to everyone suffering with Lung Troubles is —Try it. You will soon be convinced. In all the families where your German Syrup is used we have no trouble with the Lungs at all. It is the medicine for this country.
